I work for the USPS shipping supplies dept. AMA!

[Fresh Account] submitted 21 hours ago by 1949194919491949

I work under the shipping supplies department of the USPS. I am not a government employee, we are the company that orchestrates the warehouse distribution of the usps's supplies. We handle filling orders for packages/envelopes. Chances are, if you've ever ordered envelopes or boxes from the online store or through the call center we've got an account with your info up.

If you have any questions about delivery status/s or tracking information/ or questions about what the stealthiest packaging would be/etc etc. Feel free to ask me and I can probably provide you with whatever info you're looking for.

So feel free to AMA!

If I lick too many envelopes, will I die of acute toxicity like George's fiancée on Seinfeld?

about what the stealthiest packaging would be

I think I'll stick to my own thoughts on that, no offense. But thank you.

packaging options that aren't listed on the website and through the call center that are considered "Specialized packaging" and a lot of them are actually kinda cool.

Well, do tell...

EDIT: Personally, I view 'specialized' as 'uncommon,' which I consider to be a bad thing. But, I am curious.

I got off earlier and wont have access to the item master file again until tuesday since Monday is a federal holiday but once I go back I can update on more info about those. There's just a lot of different types of padded envelopes and boxes that aren't offered through the USPS website or really anywhere else unless you know specifically what to ask for.

What the best way to buy postages anonymous ly?And how can you ship with out them getting your info

Id have to look into that a little more to give you the best answer but based on what I've personally seen the best ways to buy postage anonymously would probably be prepaid packaging. You still have to pay for the postage using some kind of card account but it doesn't have to be linked to anything with a name.

My best recommendation would be using a prepaid card to buy forever prepaid boxes/envelopes and then falsifying the return information to another location that's a verified and preferably reputable business/account. Then just dropping them into a mail collection box somewhere.

I can also locate shipping information for large businesses so you'd be able to slip your packages into the mail stream in a more discreet way having them blend in identically with thousands of other identical packages being sent out by the same vendors from a location near you.

Every account, and every order is logged. When you order certain amounts they keep track of how much you are ordering and depending on whether you can verify a valid business address/business info. If you're shipping ebay, or other methods.

There isn't really any flags that are put up, the only process that they sometimes go through is if you order "over the max" which is internal code. It's never told to customers that there is a max amount, however, if you order over this amount the account info will be sent to the USPS head quarters for review and they will research the account info and find out how you pay your postage, etc.

When packages are seized there is information tied to the account about their packages being seized and it can reflect onto them into the future.

Edit: We have accounts/order histories for every customer with all of their personal information dating back to 2009/2010. It tells us when you buy boxes through ebay, through stamps.com, through the online store, pretty much everywhere. There is a huge network where no matter who you order through, they all kind of come from us in some way or another.

Do they mention to look out for people shipping illicit items? Are there any red flags you are told to look for?

Great. Thanks.

Are the boxes or envelopes you can grab from post office lobbies traceable to that location in any way? I noticed there are serial numbers inside the packaging.

Chances are, if you've ever ordered envelopes or boxes from the online store or through the call center we've got an account with your info up.

Exactly what information is stored on the customer? Do you have IP addresses?

Surely delivery addresses, names. What about payment info? Detailed order history?
How long are records kept?

If someone orders a roll of tracking stickers, does your company record which tracking numbers or which specific roll was delivered to that customer?
